OVERVIEW

Mary Knoblauch has built a reputation for providing clients with service-oriented, practical counsel and zealous representation across business and employment-related disputes—earned through more than two decades of dedicated work. Employers appreciate Mary's prompt counsel across a full range of employment and labor law issues. She is exceptionally adept at advising clients on matters involving discrimination laws, leave laws, drug testing, wage and hour law compliance, legal developments under the National Labor Relations Act, employment agreements, situations involving the discipline and discharge of an employee, and development of employee handbooks and personnel policies.

Mary is also a seasoned litigator with particular emphasis on non-competes, unfair competition, employment contract disputes, and employment discrimination. She works closely with her clients to strategize and reach their desired outcome. She is agile, responsive, and attuned to the concerns of clients spanning a broad range of industries, including medical device, healthcare, consumer goods, financial services, food processing, and manufacturing.

In addition to her work with clients, Mary served for several years as chair of Maslon's Labor & Employment Group. She has also been selected for inclusion on the Minnesota Super Lawyers® list since 2003.

SELECTED EXPERIENCE

- Obtained a temporary restraining order for medical organizations preventing a former physician/executive from working for a competitor. The case later settled when the former executive agreed not to work for any of the largest competitors for two years, and returned all confidential information. The former executive also made a significant payment toward the litigation expenses the medical organizations had incurred.
- Successfully represented a medical device company and several of its sales representative employees against claims of
